To Whom it may Concern:

I first met Trevor when he was a teenager. At the time, I represented his mother Maggie and late father, John who owned and operated Camelot Homes here in the Valley. Trevor's dad and mom were pioneers in the market place, building so called production homes which were really custom and way ahead of what others were building at the time.

Years later, I was in North Scottsdale looking at some homesites and again renewed my acquaintance with Trevor who was the then Designated Broker for his father's old company, Camelot Homes. Due to Trevor's involvement, I had a home built by Camelot and during the process, Trevor interfaced actively with me. What I liked was that he set the bar high and wanted me to be satisfied with the home that was being built. The end result reflected a high quality home that had the personal touches my family wanted.

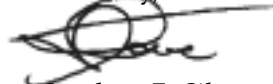

Almost five years passed since the home was built and I found it was getting smaller with two teenage daughters and a garage that could not accommodate my expanding car collection. Trevor met with me and agreed to build a casita and expand the garage so that I could accommodate my daughters desire for some private space and my own desire to have more cars located at my residence.

I was concerned that the final product not look like an add on. What resulted was an almost 600 square foot free standing casita and an oversized garage bay which had room for a lift that looked like they were built as part of the original house. Trevor can show you the before and after pictures.

Although the building process was subject to having a dumpster on the property and people coming and going, Trevor was Johnny on the spot. No problem of the addition was left to chance. In the end, the addition added substantiated value to the home. What I found was that my attention to the smallest detail was anticipated by Trevor. There was never a "problem" only a situation that was addressed and remedied by Trevor.

In summary, I would have Trevor build my next custom home and strongly recommend him.

Sincerely,

Stephen E. Silver
